

Call for Applications
AERA Congressional Fellowship Program
EXTENDED DEADLINE: Tuesday, January 17, 2017

The American Educational Research Association invites applications for the AERA Congressional Fellowship Program. This new program is being launched during AERA's Centennial year. The inaugural cohort of fellows will commence a one-year fellowship in September 2017.

The aim of the program is to provide education researchers with an opportunity to participate first-hand in the policymaking process. Fellows work on the staff of a member of Congress or a congressional committee. The fellowship also provides an opportunity for fellows to contribute their scientific expertise on issues central to the priorities and agendas of members of Congress.

The Congressional Fellowship Program will bring up to three doctorate-level education researchers to Washington, DC each year to work closely with policymakers and staff on Capitol Hill. AERA seeks candidates across career stages, areas of research specialization, and work sectors with a solid foundation and accomplishments in research (appropriate to career stage) and interests in policymaking and public service.

Applicants from diverse backgrounds (e.g., race/ethnicity, gender, disability status) and levels of experience (e.g., recent doctorates, early career researchers, faculty or research scientists on leave or sabbatical) are encouraged to consider this professional development opportunity.

AERA Congressional Fellows benefit from a comprehensive two-week orientation as well as professional development and networking opportunities throughout the year. AERA partners with the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) that administers these professional development activities to AERA fellows and fellows of other research societies. AERA also provides additional professional development and networking opportunities targeted specifically to education researchers.
