Contents

Acknowledgments v

Introduction: Why We Need to Think Systemically in Educational Policy and Reform 1
Kara S. Finnigan and Alan J. Daly

Section 1. School Districts as Leverage Points for Systems Change

1 Learning From the Past to Chart New Directions in the Study of School District Effectiveness 11
Tina Trujillo

2 Expanding School Indicator Systems in a Post-NCLB Era 49
Laura S. Hamilton and Heather L. Schwartz

Section 2. Systems Learning at the School and Classroom Levels

3 Formative Experimentation: The Role of Experimental Research in Program Development 77
Jonathan Supovitz

4 A Research-Practice Partnership to Improve Formative Classroom Assessment in Science 97
William R. Penuel and Angela Haydel DeBarger

Section 3. How Politics, Underlying Theories, and Leadership Capacity Support System-Wide Change

5 Portfolio Reform in Los Angeles: Successes and Challenges in School District Implementation 119
Susan Bush-Mecenas, Julie A. Marsh, and Katharine O. Strunk

6 Common Core, Uncommon Theory of Action: CEOs in New York City Schools 147
Priscilla Wohlstetter, Brandon Buck, David M. Houston, and Courtney O. Smith

7 How Leadership Churn Undermines Learning and Improvement in Low-Performing School Districts 183
Kara S. Finnigan, Alan J. Daly, and Yi-Hwa Liou
Section 4. Systemic Lessons for Policy and Practice: Improving School Districts Under Pressure

8  Commentary: Three Organizational Lessons for School District Improvement
    Mark A. Smylie
    209

9  Commentary: Toward Systemic Reform in Urban School Districts
    Kenneth K. Wong
    221

Conclusions: The Challenge of School and District Improvement:
    Promising Directions in District Reform
    Alan J. Daly and Kara S. Finnigan
    229

Index
    243
Conference Participants
    251
About the Contributors
    252