[No Journal Talks sessions in this time slot]
The Professional Development and Training Committee is pleased to offer a rich and dynamic program of courses during the 2017 AERA Annual Meeting. Expert scholars and researchers from universities, research institutions, and government agencies are offering some 31 courses. The curriculum includes specialized training in quantitative and qualitative research methods, advances skills in statistical techniques, covers important substantive areas, and addresses professional development issues. Courses are designed at various levels (e.g., basic, intermediate, advanced) to reach graduate students, early-career scholars, and other researchers who seek to increase their knowledge and enhance research skills.

Eleven extended courses begin on Thursday, April 27, with an additional one on Friday, April 28. The 15 mini-courses take place from Friday through Sunday, April 28–30. Space is still available for most professional development and training courses, but advance registration is encouraged. Potential participants can register by updating their 2017 AERA Annual Meeting registration (http://www.aera.net). Course participants should bring a laptop with any software suggested or specified in the course description. Direct any questions about the professional development and training courses to profdevel@aera.net.
